Warranty Claim Validation Process

In order to protect your privacy and other interests in data, delete all data, or as much as possible, from your product before returning it to Seagate. By returning your product to Seagate, you agree to the Seagate repair process as described in the Seagate Return Policy, including the transfer of your data to countries that may not offer the same level of data protection as your home country, as well as the deletion of your data. For more information about the process used by Seagate to repair products, please see Data Erasure for Returned Products.

Seagate validates every warranty claim through visual, mechanical, and functional testing to ensure that the returned product is in compliance with the Seagate Return Policy and the Seagate Warranty Void Checklist. Please note that evidence of the following will result in rejected warranty claims:

- Tampered, Altered or Misused products.
- Electrical Overstress.
- Improper Packaging. Please see Packaging & Shipping Instructions for more information.
- Out-of-Warranty, or Void Warranty.
- No Trouble Found (NTF). Before returning your product, you may use the Seagate SeaTools diagnostic tool to determine the condition of your product and whether it is eligible to be returned under warranty.

If a product is returned in compliance with these Terms and the Seagate Return Policy, Seagate will provide a functionally equivalent replacement product or credit, in accordance with your product warranty or agreement in place with Seagate directly.

Seagate may replace your product with a product that was previously used, repaired and tested to meet Seagate specifications.
